The Social Lives of Children

Thursday, May 6th, 7:00 p.m.
David Hale Memorial Library

The lives of children are characterized by many things, but few matter as much as their abilities to connect with parents, teachers, and, most of all, with each other.

America runs on relationships, collaboration and friendships. We are intensely social beings, and studies show that having friends is a key factor in youngsters' academic and emotional success.

Dr. Lipton is the executive director of the Rush Neurobehavioral Center (RNBC) in Chicago. Based on newly-published research by the RNBC team, Dr. Lipton will explain what brain-based skills children need to develop healthy friendships.

A $10.00 donation is suggested.
